Budget & Grants Committee Meeting
Documenter name: Carolyn Cooper

Summary
- The Budget & Grants Committee submitted a formal letter to Council President Blaine Griffin requesting $150,000 ($40,000 for software and $110,000 for a full-time grant administrator/manager's salary and benefits. That person will seek grants for the commission to supplement their funding as well as manage other grants).
- Jason Goodrick, interim executive director, said that if a grantee is unable to spend their own money upfront and receives reimbursement at a later date, the grantee has to “request a hardship” from the Budget and Grants Committee and propose to get their funds in advance, based on an agreed (usually quarterly) timeline.
- Goodrick said committee members were facing a challenge because they did not receive any training or mentoring on how to use the city's financial system for their grant work.

Follow-Up Questions
- Should all committee members be required to receive certification in grant writing and grant management/administration?
- Why didn't the committee members receive training, and mentoring, before they were allowed to use the city's CGI's AMS Advantage financial system?
- Are all of the committee members knowledgeable, and qualified enough, to approve and award grant funding? If so, what qualifications do they possess?

Grant process update
Goodrick informed the committee that all of the grants were in phases of execution between a CPC representative and the Cleveland Law Department.

“For that process to move forward, a grantee has to complete documents. If they have a board, they have to get a resolution from their board,” he said.

Additionally, Goodrick said that if a grantee is unable to spend their own money upfront and receive reimbursement at a later date, the grantee has to “request a hardship” from the Budget and Grants Committee and propose to get their funds in advance, based on an agreed (usually quarterly) timeline.

The committee was informed that the following three contracts had been signed:
- Cleveland Rape Crisis Center
• Cleveland Clergy Coalition Inc.
• Northeast Ohio Coalition for the Homeless

Goodrick said, “Once a contract is in, we manage all of the requests for funding, because they set us up as a new department this year. So, this is the first year that we’ve had access to the city’s financial system ourselves.”

“Unfortunately, it didn’t come with any training, or mentoring, so we are learning Advantage at the same time we’re trying to do this. So it’s a little bit challenging, to say the least,” he added.

Garrett-Ferguson asked how many grantees indicated that they had a hardship.

Goodrick replied that many of the grantees did so. Furthermore, he explained that committee members could not be “grantees’ attorneys.”

“So, what I’ve told grantees is, just like with any other contract, if you have a problem with a certain provision in this, you need to seek legal counsel. And then negotiate on your behalf,” Goodrick added.

Adams suggested that all grantees receive funds in installments. He said, “When you look at the grantees, they’re all different. So some of the programs are going to need more money in the beginning. Some are going to need a little bit more in the middle. And some are going to need it at the end.”

● Grant manager request update
Garrett-Ferguson asked for an update on hiring a grant manager.

Goodrick replied that two weeks ago, they sent a formal request letter to Council President Blaine Griffin asking that $150,000 be considered in the upcoming budgetary cycle.

Although Griffin has not yet responded, Council Member Michael Polensek, Safety Committee chair, acknowledged that the request would be considered.

Goodrick said the commission voted to approve $40,000 for software and $110,000 for a full-time grant administrator/manager’s salary and benefits. The grant manager will seek grants for the commission to supplement their funding as well as manage other grants.
● CPC Grants Survey Update
van Lier suggested that grant surveys be sent out after grantees have received their awarded funds.

● CPC grants program update

Next, van Lier said that Commissioner Cait Kennedy had conversations with staff members at the Cleveland Foundation and the Gund Foundation to request their feedback, and potential suggestions, on the following:

- The commission's scoring rubric—a scoring guide that evaluates specific elements, and expectations, for an assignment
- Request for proposals (RFP)—business documents that state, describe, and solicit bids from qualified contractor to complete a project

van Lier said that although they haven't received anything in writing or heard back from either foundation on those requests, the Cleveland Foundation did suggest that the commission do site visits and host question and answer sessions and information sessions.

Furthermore, van Lier mentioned that, with City Council's approval, the commission could give “bigger chunks of money” to the United Black Fund and Cleveland Votes to help the commission streamline their grant process and amplify their reach because those organizations are already familiar with doing grant work and they have community connections.

van Lier said the person he talked to at the Gund Foundation suggested that they contact Business Volunteers Unlimited if the committee doesn't receive funds to hire a grant manager.

Next, Goodrick said that the committee only had three people—and one of them needed to be appointed the logistics manager for 2024’s program. He added that they needed to “revamp” their application and rubric for availability on May 15.

van Lier told the committee that they had given Neighborhood Connections (home of Neighbor Up) $50,000 to distribute to their grantees. He suggested talking to City Council about increasing the committee's outsourcing ability.
Goodrick said that in 2023 the committee struggled to get everything out.

Garrett-Ferguson said that grant tiers and micro-grants should be created so that potential grantees can't apply for funds that they are not ready to process.

Goodrick said that committee members had to complete their conflict-of-interest forms and that grant applicants would be required to self-report any conflicts. He said they should withdraw their application if they know any of the commissioners (whose names will be listed on the application).

Goodrick advised the committee members to personally reach out to their council members and tell them what their committee needs. Also, he stated that all of the commissioners should be present at the budget meetings to discuss the importance of their program; their need for $150,000; why they need more oversight; and how additional funding could help the committee.
